Acknowledgments

Many people contributed in some way to this thesis. I thank Marco Haan, Peter Kooreman, and Bert Schoonbeek for giving me the opportunity to work on this project in the first place. Writing a Master thesis under Bert's supervision contributed decisively to my interest in microeconomics and thereby to interest in this endeavour.

After some time Peter left Groningen and José Luis Moraga-González became my promotor. I am indebted to him for accepting this task. Bert, José, and Marco's supervision and guidance was splendid. Bert's accuracy and emphasis on clarity and consistency helped me write structured papers. José's tough questions led to fruitful research questions. Without Marco's rhetorical skills few would be able to grasp the ideas I try to convey.

Some of these ideas crystallized during conversations with my roommates, Pim Heijnen, Bastiaan Overvest, and Remco van Eijkel. I must stress that all our conversations, as well as those during coffee breaks with Lammertjan Dam, Rients Galema, Aljar Meesters, and many others, were intellectually stimulating and essential for completing this thesis.

In a more formal setting, I discussed my work with Ramon Caminal, Paul Heidhues, Linda Toolsema-Veldman, and Nils-Henrik von der Fehr. Their insights helped improve some chapters considerably.

I am grateful to the members of the reading committee, Ben Heijdra, Emmanuel Petrakis, and Cees Withagen, for their willingness to read the manuscript. I am looking forward to their comments.

My enthusiasm for doing research in economics has been fueled by inspiring lectures of top economists during summer schools organized by CORE, ECARES, and NAKE and presentations at conferences. Attending such gatherings requires using airports. I thank these airports for creating an environment where the only sensible thing to do is writing a paper.

Of course, I also spent time outside the university the last four years. I am glad that I could count on many friends for both fun and comfort. Lastly, I would especially like to thank my parents for their continuing support.
