Acknowledgements

I feel extremely lucky to have had the opportunity to focus on philosophical research and work on this dissertation for the last four years. My time as a PhD student has played a very important role in my personal development. I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone who has contributed to this.

First and foremost, I would like to thank my absolutely excellent supervisor Emar Maier. Emar is a role model. Not only is he an extremely talented and serious researcher, he is also deeply invested in the well-being of his PhD students and exhibits a seemingly never-ending readiness to have impromptu meetings to discuss new worries, issues, questions and plans.

I would like to thank my colleague Sofia Bimpikou for being an awesome friend, making conferences and summer schools extra fun, inspiring discussions and fruitful collaboration.

I would like to thank everyone at the faculty of philosophy for creating a friendly and supportive atmosphere where young philosophers can thrive. In particular, I would like to thank the members of the semantics of fiction reading group for high quality discussions and my friends Cesar Reigosa Soler, Crystel Hajjar, Grzegorz Gaszczyk, Kritika Maheshwari, Michael Gregory, Sanne Hupkes, Stefan Sleeuw, Stipe Pandžić and Yuri David Santos.

I would like to thank the Semantics and Cognition group at the University of Groningen for allowing me to join their meetings and get a taste of the world outside of philosophy. I would also like to thank the people at the Institut Jean Nicod in Paris for the warm welcome I received during my research visit there.

Finally, I would like to thank my family and friends for their tremendous support, particularly at the final stages of the project. Especially I would like to thank my partner Jochem Dijkstra; my parents Jaap Semeijn and Marjolein Semeijn Visser; my brothers Koen Semeijn and Rik Semeijn; and my close friends Alissa Mali, Claire Wagemans, Justin Warners, Leandra du Pau, Sophie Starrenburg and Vanja Sarić.
