About the author

Alessandra Carioli holds a Bachelor and Master of Science degree in Economics at Bocconi University, and a Master in Demography at Stockholm University. She has interned at Max Planck Institute for Demographic Research in Rostock, and worked as junior researcher at Dondena Centre for Research on Social Dynamics and Public Policy upon graduating. Her PhD was funded by a four years grant by the University of Groningen, during which she was affiliated with the National Demographic Research Institute, NIDI, in the Hague and attended the Young Scientist Summer Program at IIASA, Laxenburg (Austria). Alessandra conducted the current dissertation under the supervision of Prof. Van Wissen and of Dr. Spijker, who became co-supervisor of her thesis during the last phases of the dissertation. She collaborated with Prof. Recaño and Devolder during her visiting period at CED, at the Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, in Spain. While finalising her thesis, she has worked as researcher at the University of Southampton, Faculty of Geography, where she was awarded the High Impact Research Award in 2018.
