

University of Groningen

Why we gossip

Martinescu, Elena

IMPORTANT NOTE: You are advised to consult the publisher's version (publisher's PDF) if you wish to cite from it. Please check the document version below.

Document Version

Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Publication date:

2017

Link to publication in University of Groningen/UMCG research database

Citation for published version (APA):

Martinescu, E. (2017). Why we gossip: A functional perspective on the self-relevance of gossip for senders, receivers and targets. [Thesis fully internal (DIV), University of Groningen]. University of Groningen, SOM research school.

Copyright

Other than for strictly personal use, it is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

The publication may also be distributed here under the terms of Article 25fa of the Dutch Copyright Act, indicated by the "Taverne" license. More information can be found on the University of Groningen website: <https://www.rug.nl/library/open-access/self-archiving-pure/taverne-amendment>.

Take-down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Downloaded from the University of Groningen/UMCG research database (Pure): <http://www.rug.nl/research/portal>. For technical reasons the number of authors shown on this cover page is limited to 10 maximum.

Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I am grateful to my supervisors, Onne and Bernard, for guiding me through my PhD studies. Onne, thank you for believing in me and for being supportive from before our collaboration officially started. As a master student I came to you a week before the application deadline for the PhD programme, with a vague idea about the research I wanted to do. In just a few days we wrote a successful research proposal, which we have since transformed into a dissertation. I remember that at the beginning you made the effort to check if your supervisory style matched my working style. One time after you sent me a draft with a lot of comments and corrections you stopped by to ask if I'm comfortable with my text being slayed like that. I understood then that I'm lucky to have a caring supervisor, whose primary aims are to guide me in doing high quality research, but also to make sure that I arrive in one piece at the end of this long process.

Bernard, thank you for joining as a supervisor on my PhD project. Throughout these years I had much to learn from your way of making complicated things look simple by cutting through to the core of problems – usually with a graph or a table! I would like to thank you in particular for one piece of advice you gave me. It was the first year of my project, and we were working out the first sets of results. Our original hypotheses weren't supported, and I was very disappointed. I remember you telling me this: the most important predictor of success for a PhD project is your motivation, and not whether your data is perfect. That conversation gave me a lot of confidence in the work I did, and the energy to continue, explore, and take risks.

This project was challenging at times because none of us knew precisely how to do research on gossip. However, that was not going to be a setback for us. I am grateful to you both for bringing in your expertise, critical thinking, and openness to a new research area, and for providing me with constructive feedback. In addition, I thank you, Onne and Bernard, for always making me feel that you have my best interest at heart, beyond the research output.

Next I would like to say a big thank you to Roxy Foxy, my friend, office-mate, and sometimes colleague in suffering. I cannot describe in just a few words how happy I am to have spent these years together with you. We shared our experiences as PhD students, our food, a bit of gossip (only for science though 😊), and many many silly moments, which to me have been very entertaining and necessary distractions.

Acknowledgements

Furthermore, I would like to thank my colleagues at the HRM & OB department, who have made me feel very welcome here. You have helped me without hesitation each time I turned to you with a question or request. I have enjoyed our many activities, lunches, coffee breaks, outings and borrels! Tineke, thank you for being there and for helping me solve all sorts of problems throughout the years, which sometimes seemed bureaucratic or personal riddles. Frederik, thank you for being a fun colleague and a great listener, and for accepting the role of paranymp!

I have very much enjoyed my life in Groningen, and that is thanks to my great network of friends. They have filled my life with so many precious moments! From the beginning I felt blessed to be part of many groups of friends and communities: the international students of Plutolaan, my peers from the research master, the diverse members of Nothing Left To Do But Drink and the girls of Girls Just Wanna have Fun (I am so happy to have met you Catriona, Irena, Maeva, and Simone!!! – and please not that you are in alphabetical order here 😊), my fellow PhD students at FEB, the Romanians of Groningen (thank you Bighi and Elena), the people at STHH, the Deep Focus Film Club, and the Couchsurfing Cooking Club. Wow, 6 years in Groningen is a lifetime in any other place!

I am also very grateful to my friends back home, who make me feel like time and distance are superfluous concepts. Every time we meet we pick up right where we left off! Silviu, thank you for the 10 years we spent (growing up) together, and for the inspiration and motivation you gave me in pursuing a PhD.

Finally, I would like to thank my family for your love, patience and wisdom. I feel blessed to have your support in all my choices!