Bottom-up and online populism in contemporary China

He, Kun

DOI:
10.33612/diss.667437171

IMPORTANT NOTE: You are advised to consult the publisher's version (publisher's PDF) if you wish to cite from it. Please check the document version below.

Document Version
Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Publication date:
2023

Link to publication in University of Groningen/UMCG research database

Citation for published version (APA):
He, K. (2023). Bottom-up and online populism in contemporary China: an understanding beyond the West. [Thesis fully internal (DIV), University of Groningen]. University of Groningen.
https://doi.org/10.33612/diss.667437171

Copyright
Other than for strictly personal use, it is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

The publication may also be distributed here under the terms of Article 25fa of the Dutch Copyright Act, indicated by the “Taverne” license. More information can be found on the University of Groningen website: https://www.rug.nl/library/open-access/self-archiving-pure/taverne-amendment.

Take-down policy
If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Downloaded from the University of Groningen/UMCG research database (Pure): http://www.rug.nl/research/portal. For technical reasons the number of authors shown on this cover page is limited to 10 maximum.
POPULISM in contemporary China: Bottom-up and online populism in contemporary China

Kun He, Author of "Understanding beyond the West"
Bottom-up and online populism in contemporary China

an understanding beyond the West

PhD thesis

to obtain the degree of PhD at the University of Groningen on the authority of the Rector Magnificus Prof. C. Wijmenga and in accordance with the decision by the College of Deans.

This thesis will be defended in public on Thursday 29 June 2023 at 14.30 hours

by

Kun He

born on 21 May 1987
in Hubei, China
Supervisor
Prof. M.J. Broersma

Co-supervisor
Prof. S.A. Eldridge II

Assessment Committee
Prof. S.I. Aasman
Prof. R. Schroeder
Prof. L.P. Rensmann
Table of contents

Introduction ...................................................................................................................2
1.1 The global rise of populism ..................................................................................3
1.2 Populism in China ............................................................................................... 6
   1.2.1 China’s party-state and democratic meritocracy ....................................... 7
   1.2.2 The media environment: tension between protest and control ............. 9
1.3 Key concepts: populism, the people and online public opinion ....................... 12
   1.3.1 Populism .......................................................................................................12
   1.3.2 The people ...................................................................................................15
   1.3.3 The general will and online public opinion in China ................................18
   1.3.4 Towards a framework for discursive analysis ..........................................20
1.4 Gaps in knowledge ...............................................................................................22
1.5 Objective and research questions .......................................................................25
1.6 Thesis outline .......................................................................................................26

Chapter Two ............................................................................................................... 35
Conceptualizing Populism: A Comparative Study Between China and Liberal Democratic Countries .........................................................................................................................35
2.1 Introduction .........................................................................................................35
2.2 Conceptual approaches to populism ....................................................................36
   2.2.1 Populism as ideology .................................................................................36
   2.2.2 Populism as political strategy .................................................................37
   2.2.3 Populism as a sociocultural phenomenon ..............................................38
   2.2.4 Populism as discourse ..............................................................................39
   2.2.5 Populism as a political style .................................................................40
   2.2.6 Populism as social movement ...............................................................40
   2.2.7 Critical theory and authoritarian populism ..........................................41
2.3 Expanding populism research to the Chinese context .......................................42
2.4 Methods: Assessing populism research in China ............................................ 43
2.5 Findings ...............................................................................................................45
   2.5.1 Theoretical populism ...............................................................................45
2.5.2 Historical populism ................................................................. 47
2.5.3 Contemporary online populism ............................................. 49
2.6 Discussion and conclusion ....................................................... 52

Chapter Three .................................................................................. 59

Methods and Data ............................................................................... 59
3.1 Introduction ................................................................................. 59
3.2 Mixed methods and triangulation .............................................. 60
3.3 Methodological challenges ....................................................... 62
3.4 Data collection ........................................................................... 65
   3.4.1 Case and data for online populists’ articulation of the people .......... 67
   3.4.2 Case and data for discursive logic of online populists’ articulation .... 68
   3.4.3 Cases and data for populist visual communication .................... 70
3.5 Data analysis ............................................................................... 72
   3.5.1 Discourse analysis and multimodal discourse analysis ............... 72
   3.5.2 Grounded theory and computational grounded theory ............. 75
3.6 Limitations .................................................................................. 79
3.7 Research ethics .......................................................................... 80
3.8 Conclusion .................................................................................. 82

Chapter Four ..................................................................................... 87

Who are the People? Populists’ Articulation of “the People” in Contemporary China 87
4.1 Introduction ................................................................................ 87
4.2 Tensions around the people ....................................................... 89
   4.2.1 The power of the people: the titular holders and actual wielders .... 89
   4.2.3 The demarcation of the people: inclusiveness and exclusiveness .... 90
   4.2.3 The discursive power of “the people” in the context of China ......... 91
4.3 Methodology .............................................................................. 93
4.4 Findings ..................................................................................... 95
   4.4.1 Exclusion: The Chinese nation as an ideological glue .......... 95
   4.4.2 Anti-intellectualism: The mass resist through parody and satire ... 98
   4.4.3 Socially vulnerable groups and internet-enabled collective protest .. 100
7.1.1 The distinctive characteristics of Chinese populism...............................161
7.1.2 The discursive power of the people .........................................................164
7.1.3 The discursive logics of populist online articulation.............................167
7.1.4 Populist visual communication in China...............................................169
7.2 Understanding online bottom-up populism in China..............................172
  7.2.1 The people and the netizens...............................................................174
  7.2.2 The general will and online public opinion..........................................176
7.3 Populism as a “pressure valve” for the Chinese “social volcano”..........178
  7.3.1 Weakening the discursive power of online bottom-up populism by communist populism..............................................................179
  7.3.2 Depolarizing online bottom-up populist discourse through censorship mechanism.........................................................................................179
  7.3.3 Redirecting internal pressure towards external others ....................181
7.4 Theoretical implications...........................................................................182
7.5 Avenues for future research.......................................................................183

Samenvatting........................................................................................................187

Appendix.............................................................................................................197
  Bibliography....................................................................................................197
  List of publications..........................................................................................216
  Conference presentations................................................................................217
  Alumni of The Centre for Media and Journalism Studies..........................218
  About the author.............................................................................................220
List of Tables and Figures

Table 2.1 Sample Selection Procedures and Criteria Applied.............................................. 43

Figure 2.1 Themes of populism research in China................................................................. 45

Table 3.1 Populist Cases Selection Procedures and Criteria Applied................................. 64

Table 3.2 The Labels of Populist Cases from 2003 to 2020 in China..................................... 65

Table 3.3 Cases, Sources, and Data for the Studies of This Thesis...................................... 71

Table 3.4 An Analyzing Procedure of Internet Memes.......................................................... 74

Figure 3.1 A novel approach which combines grounded theory and computational grounded theory. .................................................................................................................. 79

Table 4.1 The Result of the Clustering of the 61 Populism Cases........................................... 94

Table 4.2 Forms and Content of “Expedition Weapons”.......................................................... 97

Figure 4.3 Zhihu discussion on Dongguan Anti-pornography Movement. Source: Zhihu post, 13 February, 2013........................................................................................................... 102

Figure 4.4 Top-down populism in Euro-American context....................................................... 106

Figure 5.1 The analyzing procedures of this study. Partly adapted from Nelson (2020, p.14)........................................................................................................................................... 119

Table 5.1 The Result of Human Coding and LDA Topic Modeling......................................... 120

Figure 5.2 The perplexity and coherence of LDA topic modeling......................................... 122

Figure 5.3 Three stages of #DrivingIntoThePalaceMuseum................................................ 123

Table 6.1 A Comparison Between Shifman and Wiggins....................................................... 141

Figure 6.1 Seals on internet memes in 2016, 2018, and 2019............................................... 146

Table 6.2 An Analyzing Procedure of Internet Memes.......................................................... 146

Figure 6.2 Playful style of jiong is visualized to express a wide range of emotions.149

Figure 6.3-4-5 The self-mockery diaosi image constructed by visual semiotic of jiong playful style. ......................................................................................................................... 149
Figure 6.6-7-8 Delegitimizing the authority of Ing-wen Tsai through jiong playful style in 2016 .................................................................................................................. 150

Figure 6.9-10-11 Weaponizing images into internet memes with jiong playful style in 2016 and in 2018. .................................................................................................................. 151

Figure 6.12-13-14 Weaponized political iconographies that were used in 2016 .... 153

Figure 6.15-16-17 Weaponized internet memes. .................................................... 154

Figure 7.1 Top-down populism in Euro-American contexts ......................... 173

Figure 7.3 Online public opinion in China .................................................. 177
Acknowledgement

One week ago, following ten months of dedicated care, my son arrived into the world and became an official part of our family. Alongside the overwhelming joy, I also found a moment to write the acknowledgement for my extensive 50-month-long doctoral research. The birth of a child signifies the beginning of life, just as the submission of a doctoral thesis symbolizes the new start of my academic life. The start of life represents love and responsibility, while the inception of an academic career embodies boundless opportunities and challenges.

Looking back, I must express my gratitude to my two doctoral supervisors, Marcel and Scott. Firstly, I am thankful to them for inviting me into the Groningen community, providing me and Xiangyuan (Cathy) the opportunity to pursue our doctoral research at the same university. This allowed our family to reunite in Groningen, where has become our second hometown. Secondly, without the careful guidance of both supervisors, the completion of my doctoral thesis would not have been possible. Marcel not only provided constructive advice from a macro perspective but also made precise micro-level edits to enhance the accuracy and conciseness of my writing. Scott’s guidance was more specific, allowing me to explore the richness and diversity of expression. From Marcel, I experienced the profound knowledge and wisdom of a professor, becoming a role model for me. From Scott, I felt the importance of patience and attention to detail, essential qualities for achieving academic goals. I am grateful for their support and encouragement at every crucial moment of my doctoral training. Their meticulous guidance and care allowed me to successfully complete my thesis during the challenging times of the pandemic. Of course, the training during my doctoral phase has equipped me with a certain level of independent research capability, and it will be difficult to find such attentive guidance in the future. I will cherish the moments we spent discussing together, but I will also carry the guidance I received from them as I continue my academic journey.

I am grateful to my colleagues in the Centre for Media and Journalism Studies and the fellow doctoral students for their contributions to the successful completion of my doctoral thesis. Marc’s course on the networked society provided me with significant inspiration. Rik’s research on digital memory sparked my interest in the digital memory of the COVID-19 pandemic. Joëlle’s mixed methodology in her doctoral thesis offered valuable references for my own work. I would also like to thank Qian, whose research shares many similarities with mine. Her different perspectives have given me new insights into the same cases. I also appreciate Lars for helping to revise the Dutch summary of this thesis. I appreciate many other colleagues who have added vibrant colors to my busy and intense doctoral life through numerous lunch lectures, gatherings, and parties (Rashid, David, Sandra, Rosa, Qinfeng, Frank, Çigdem, Robert, Geoff, Joao, Claudia, Ansgard, Bharath, Smith, Olga, Eedan, Arman, Rachel, Josephine, Jaana). And to my fellow doctoral students (Denise, Kim, Alex, Yichen, Maud, Inga, Welmoed, Iris, Lisette, Daniel, Nathalie, Marije, Tyler, Emilie), I have thoroughly enjoyed the relaxed and pleasant discussions we have had among peers. In January of this year, with a new research topic, I had the privilege of joining the Computational Linguistics Group. I would like to express my gratitude to the new team members, particularly Malvina and Huiyuan, for their support in facilitating my transition from a doctoral student to an independent postdoctoral researcher.

I would also like to express my gratitude to Professor Aasman, who provided helpful insights to further polish the thesis. Professor Rensmann provided me with constructive feedback on my research ideas, focusing on the digital or online feature of Chinese populism when I first arrived in Groningen. Professor Schroeder shared with me his extensive research on populism in China, which proved to be invaluable references for my own research. Besides, Léonie also provided me with numerous literature on bottom-up populism, helping me to clarify some characteristics of populism in China. I also thank Professor Jun Liu from the University of Copenhagen for all the insightful talks during the nights. Additionally, I would like to thank Professor Halbertsma from the East Asian Studies. Every time I passed by his office, he would invite me in for a chat, creating a relaxed and enjoyable atmosphere for our exchanges.

The academic journey can sometimes be lonely, but I am fortunate to have David Veltman as my companion. On sunny days, we would share lunch on the rooftop, enjoying the leisurely sunlight. Furthermore, I would like to express special gratitude to Sun Yu. She is an extremely helpful person. Before I came to Groningen, she provided me with a wealth of information about the city. During my doctoral research, we often discussed, learned from each other, and encouraged one another.

Without the support of Xiangyuan my wife, daughter Tangtang and son Tuantuan, I would not have been able to complete my thesis. Words cannot express the gratitude towards them, as I owe them so much. When we first arrived in the Netherlands, we couldn’t find a suitable apartment, so we had to leave our daughter in China under the care of her grandparents. Later, COVID pandemic caused delays in my research progress, and I had less time to spend with her in order to complete my thesis on time. Of course, I owe a lot to my beautiful, generous, and understanding wife. She also pursued her own doctoral research, and her workload was no less than mine. Later, we welcomed a new life, and her workload grew even bigger. Although it was challenging, having the company of my family gave us the courage to face the challenges and hardships together.

A child travels thousands of miles, and the mother worries. I also owe a great deal to my parents and family. Unbeknownst to me, they have all aged, their temples turning gray. A few days after the birth of my child, my parents also came to the Netherlands, giving me the opportunity to spend time with them, albeit for a short 90 days. In the beautiful and sunny spring, I could have a drink with my father, take a stroll after meals, and have a chat. I could talk to my mother, occasionally receiving her criticism and admonishment, which, to me, is also a kind of happiness.

In short, I am grateful to every person who has appeared in my life, and I thank you all for your companionship on this journey of life. They include, but not limit to Chao Men, Zhiwei Li, Taozi Jie, Xiaoming Wang, Jian Lin, Chenyu and Jiapan, Jingzhou Sun, Peiyuan Zhou, Bingquan and Jingyao, Yukun Dong, Junjie and Liping, Yingjie, Wang, Ran Tai, and so on.

Special thanks to Denise and Huiyuan to be my paranyphms, and the help both of you provided.

May 3, 2023